A fully funded 3 year PhD Studentship is now available at the Institute of Criminology for an October 2015 start.

Topics can include:

- Research of supervision and community penalties; the reintegration of offenders into the community after prison sentences; race and gender issues in criminal justice; women, crime and criminal justice; the arts in criminal justice; restorative justice; youth justice.

- Areas related to the prison experience; prisoner well-being; the work of prison officers and other staff; evaluating prison quality and outcomes; and in the prevention of ill-treatment, in the UK or elsewhere.

- Analytical criminology (causes and mechanisms in the explanation of crime); ecological, situational and developmental aspects of crime causation; specific topics of crime causation (generally or for specific types of crime); disadvantage; moral contexts; deterrence; personal morals; self-control; social selection; social institutions; translational criminology (applying knowledge about crime causation devising crime prevention policy, generally or for specific crimes).

- Evidence-based policing; global violence prevention; bullying and delinquency; fraud; police legitimacy; domestic violence; neuro-criminology; child sexual exploitation; complex network analysis; human trafficking; organized crime; economic crime.

- Causes and consequences of violence; human development and aggression; cross-cultural comparative analysis of violence; state functioning and violence; violence research in LMIC countries, violence and bullying prevention; policing and police legitimacy; victimisation and victim protection.

Fixed-term: The funds for this studentship are available for 3 years with a start date of 1 October 2015.

Eligibility: Candidates should have an excellent academic background preferably in the social sciences, holding a 1st or upper 2nd class degree and have completed or currently be completing a relevant Master’s degree.

Funding: Full tuition fees will be paid plus a maintenance stipend of £12,530 per year. In addition, students are allowed £1000 for fieldwork/conferences over the three-year period.
Applicants should contact Dr Maria Ttofi (mt394@cam.ac.uk) with any queries about studying for a PhD at the Institute. Interested persons are encouraged to make informal contact with the Institute in the first instance so that we can check that there will be available supervision for any chosen topic (graduate.administrator@crim.cam.ac.uk). Please direct queries concerning this studentship competition to Professor Loraine Gelsthorpe (lrg10@cam.ac.uk).

Applications should be made through the University of Cambridge's Graduate Admissions Office. http://www.graduate.study.cam.ac.uk/ This will involve the submission of two academic references, a research proposal, transcripts and degree certificates, to the Graduate Admissions Office by 30 June 2015 at the latest.

All current applicants with offers for a PhD place at the Institute to start in October 2015 will automatically be considered for this award.