

UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

Institute of Criminology

Testing Crime Prevention – Or Selling a Product? Conflicts of Interest in Criminology

Professor Manuel Eisner

Professor of Developmental and Comparative Criminology, University of Cambridge

Institute of Criminology Public Seminar Series

Thursday 11th October 2012, 5.30pm

Seminar Room B3, Institute of Criminology,
Sidgwick Avenue, Cambridge, CB3 9DA

A drinks reception in the basement foyer will follow this seminar for attendees

In areas such as medicine or engineering considerable evidence suggests that researchers with a vested interest in a given product tend to report better outcomes of randomized trials than independent researchers. But is this a problem in criminological research as well? Nobody really knows because no good research has yet been conducted on the topic. But undoubtedly there are areas of prevention and intervention practice like offender treatment programmes, parenting programmes or school-based prevention programmes where commercial products are being sold internationally on a scale that was unknown until very recently. The seminar will discuss the role of conflict of interest in the prevention industry and prevention research, show the ways in which biased results may emerge without any intentional manipulation of the data, and suggest ways to make sure that evidence-based criminology produces unbiased estimates of true effects.

Manuel Eisner is Professor of Developmental and Comparative Criminology at the Institute of Criminology of the University of Cambridge. He conducts a large-scale randomized trial on the long-term effects of early universal prevention programmes. In 2011 he won the prestigious Selin Glueck Award of the American Society of Criminology. His research interests include the history of violence, the cross-national comparative analysis of causes of crime, developmental criminology with a focus on aggression and violence, and evidence-based violence prevention.

This seminar is free, and is open to all interested in attending, with no ticket required.

If you wish to be added to the seminar mailing list, please contact: Joanne Garner, on: jf225@cam.ac.uk

For full listing of IoC Seminars: <http://www.crim.cam.ac.uk/> For directions: <http://www.crim.cam.ac.uk/where.html>