

The Future of Criminology

A conference to celebrate the outstanding work of Professor David P. Farrington
Friday 20 April 2012

9.00 onwards Registration, coffee available

10.00 Welcome – Friedrich Lösel

Laudatio: A Future of Criminology and a Criminologist for the Ages
Rolf Loeber, University of Pittsburgh and Free University of Amsterdam

David Farrington's Contribution to Policy and Practice
Graham Towl, Durham University

Developmental Origins of Aggression: from Social Learning to Epigenetics
Richard E. Tremblay, University of Montreal

11.20 Coffee break

11.40 Biology of Crime: Past, Present and Future Perspectives,
Adrian Raine, University of Pennsylvania

Research on Criminal Careers: Contributions, Opportunities, and Needs
Alfred Blumstein, Carnegie Mellon University

Research on Criminal Careers: Looking Back to Predict Ahead
Alex R. Piquero, University of Texas at Dallas

13.00 Lunch

14.00 The Cambridge Study in Delinquent Development
Donald West, University of Cambridge

Criminological Theory: Past Achievements and Future Challenges,
Terence P. Thornberry, University of Maryland

Risk and Protective Factors in the Assessment of School Bullies and Victims
Maria Ttofi, University of Cambridge

Adult Onset Offending: Perspectives for Future Research
Georgia Zara, University of Turin

15.40 Coffee & tea break

16.10 Taking Effective Crime Prevention to Scale
J. David Hawkins, University of Washington

Preventing Delinquency by Putting Families First
Brandon C. Welsh, Northeastern University and NSCR

Staking Out the Next Generation of Studies of the Criminology of Place
David Weisburd, George Mason University and Hebrew University

Looking Back and Forward, David Farrington

18.00 Close

