Trust in justice – how much do we need?
A short history of trust and its present condition

Professor Susanne Karstedt

Institute of Criminology Public Seminar Series

Thursday 26th November 2009, 5.30pm
Seminar Room B3, Institute of Criminology,
Sidgwick Avenue, Cambridge, CB3 9DA

In contemporary societies, trust seems slowly but inevitably to vanish. Governments deplore the erosion of trust in criminal justice, and search for remedies that can restore it for an increasingly distrustful public. This seminar will track the history of trust, and identify those factors that have produced trust in general and in criminal justice institutions in particular. It will then turn to the decline of trust in criminal justice institutions across a selection of countries, focusing on the UK and the US. Finally the comparative advantages (or disadvantages) of trust (or distrust) in criminal justice for levels of punitiveness and imprisonment are analysed. We need less trust in justice than we think we do.

Susanne Karstedt is Professor of Criminology and Criminal Justice at the Centre for Criminal Justice Studies, University of Leeds. She has published on numerous subjects ranging from comparative crime and justice studies, democracy, crime and justice, emotions and criminal justice, to transitional justice and middle class crime.

This seminar is part of the IoC Public Seminar Series, and is open to all interested in attending. If you wish to be added to the seminar mailing list, please contact: Joanne Garner, on: jf225@cam.ac.uk
